Since time began, the Dragon and the Phoenix have guarded over and guided the intertwining paths of life, maintaining the careful balance between the twin forces of choice and destiny. These two powerful beings share the noble task of overseeing the many roads that lead to divine wisdom. Through its masterful blend of strategy and chance, Tsuro represents the classic quest for enlightenment.

RULES
Tsuro™ is a board game for two to eight players. Players place tiles on the board to build paths that begin at the edge of the board and travel around the interior. The object of the game is to keep your path from connecting to an edge of the game board. Outlast all the other players to win.

CONTENTS
• 1 game board
• 50 path tiles
• 8 marker stones
• 1 Dragon tile

THE TILES
Each path tile shows four lines—or paths—that create sight points on the tile’s edge. When the tiles are laid alongside each other, these points line up and the paths continue. Each tile is unique. Paths on a tile might cross one another, but that each proceed uninterrupted and independently of the others.

For example, the paths on this tile connect only the two points marked A. The two points marked B, and so on.

The special Dragon tile keeps track of which player draws first when the game begins is pulled.

SETUP
1. Lay out the game board.
2. Each player chooses a marker.
3. Find the Dragon tile and set it aside.
4. Shuffle the path tiles and deal three face up to each player.
5. Those tiles create your hand. You may look at the tile in your hand at any time.
6. Stack the remaining path tiles face down. This stack is the deal pile.

PLAYING THE GAME
The oldest player takes the first turn.

THE FIRST PLAYER
The first player places his or her marker on any of the start marks (short beige marks) on the outside edge of the game board. Continue clockwise around the board until each player has chosen a start mark and placed his or her marker. Placing markers happens before any tiles are played.

Each turn has three parts:
1. Play a path tile.
2. Move the markers.
3. Draw tiles.

The player currently taking his or her turn is called the active player.

1. PLAY A PATH TILE
The active player chooses one of the path tiles from his or her hand and places it on the open square next to his or her marker. The tile may be placed in any direction. Once a tile has been placed, it cannot be moved for the rest of the game. A player may not willingly connect his or her own path to the edge of the board (thereby forcing himself or herself out of the game) unless no other move is possible. Near the end of the game, it is possible to eliminate yourself in this manner.

2. MOVE THE MARKERS
The active player moves his marker to the open end of his path.

Then all other markers adjacent to the new tile are moved to the ends of their paths.

A player is eliminated from the game if the open end of his or her path connects to the edge of the board. Path tiles from eliminated players’ hands are shuffled into the draw pile.

3. DRAW TILES
For the first few turns of the game (or throughout a two-player game), only the active player draws a path tile from the draw pile, replacing the one he or she played that turn.

Later in the game, when players have fewer than three path tiles in their hands, all players will have the chance to draw tiles, even if it is not their turn.

Starting with the active player and moving clockwise, each player with fewer than three path tiles draws a tile, continuing around the board until all players have three path tiles or the draw pile is empty. This rule changes slightly if a player has the Dragon tile.

When new tiles become available later in the game, any player may draw any path tile from the draw pile, replacing the one he or she played that turn.

ADVANCED RULES
ELIMINATION BONUS
If one or more opponents are eliminated as a result of a new tile being placed, the active player may immediately exchange any of his tiles in his or her hand for the消除的eliminated players’ hands. Remaining tiles from the eliminated players’ hands are shuffled into the draw pile.

PASS THE TILE
Some Tsuro groups pass the entire draw pile around the table, keeping the Dragon tile at the bottom of the pile. This can be good for larger groups around big tables. It can also help remain players to draw every turn. Remember not to shuffle the Dragon tile when new tiles become available.

EXAMPLE OF PLAY
The following illustrations show the first three turns of a three-player Tsuro game.

Figure 1: Players place their third tiles. Note that tiles can no longer be placed in the square in the lower left corner.

Figure 2: Players place their second tiles. Note that since one marker cannot be placed in the square in the lower left corner, Players 1, 2, and 3 each choose an unoccupied start mark on the outside of the board and place one tile. Player 2 extends his path across the first tile played by Player 1.

Figure 3: Players place their third tiles. Players 2 and 3 place tiles on the Dragon tile. Player 2’s third tile pushes Player 1’s path toward Player 3.

Figure 4: The paths of Players 1 and 3 are connected on a two-player Tsuro game. Both players are eliminated from the game.

Figure 5: Players move their third tiles. Player 1 plays his third tile on a new path to the edge of the board.

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS
Q: What happens if the paths of two markers become connected (run into each other)?
A: Both players are eliminated from the game.

Q: Can’t a player place a path tile that will force one or more other markers off the edge of the board?
A: A player may not connect his or her own path to the edge of the board (thereby forcing himself or herself out of the game) unless no other move is possible. Near the end of the game, it is possible to eliminate yourself in this manner.

Q: What happens if an eliminated player has the Dragon tile?
A: If an eliminated player has the Dragon tile, any one of the remaining players (or all of them) may place the Dragon tile on the next tile played in the game, if it is possible to eliminate someone in this manner.

Q: What happens if all the tiles have been played and two or more markers remain on the board?
A: Those two players tie for the win.

Q: What happens if all remaining players are eliminated on the same turn?
A: Those players tie for the win.

CREDITS
Original Game Design: Tim & Michelle
Product Development: Jan Long, Jan, Laugh, and Truck Johnson
Art Direction: Shawn Small
Graphic Design: Cathy Bing and Derek Phillips
Photography:estado stall
Editing: Brooke Reddy
Art Direction: Jennifer Chang and Diane Wimmer
Brand Management: Tiffany O’Brien
Project Management: Tina Wegner
Special Thanks: Tom Brosnan, Ray Wilcox
© 2009 Compound Fun, LLC. All rights reserved. Tsuro, Calliope Games, and Compound Fun are trademarks of Compound Fun, LLC.

For more information, visit compoundsfun.com or email us at compoundsfun@comcast.net.